Customer Reviews

I downloaded a copy of this book onto my tablet, but before I could get started with it, my 12-year-old son stole my tablet so he could read it first!! He loved it so much that we ordered a copy of the book on so he could read it again without hiding my iPad from me. We enjoyed this 3rd book as much as the first two books in the series!! What a fun read! We both learned something about the geography of Spain, and got an art history lesson in the process! Lucas Benes and his globe-trotting New Resistance friends have no fear as they take on Siba Gunerro, CEO of The Good Company and her latest group of Curukian thugs. Lucas is relentless in his quest to take down The Good Company, and in the process uncovers the real meaning of the "Priceless" message left to him by his mother. The true beauty of this series are the educational and moral lessons that are woven into the stories in a fun, adventurous way that keeps young readers engaged. We would definitely go watch a movie(s) based on this series!!!

As a traveler and multilingual teacher, Paul has clocked nearly half his life outside the US. When he was a teenager, he slept on the streets of London to watch a royal wedding. He took the CIA exam because he wanted to be a spy for the good guys (and not the Good Company). He was an au pair in France and built a children's library in Africa. "I write shorter stories that I would have wanted to read when I was ten, eleven, twelve-- realistic and exciting international espionage novels steeped in mystery, intrigue, and deception. I want children to see that the impossible may in fact be possible, and that children may have more power than they think. This middle school series is set in international locales because travel has made me feel alive and given me an insatiable curiosity to learn. A former middle school teacher, Aertker says he writes for this age group because he relates to it. "I act like a child," he says with a laugh. "My emotional level doesn't really go past age eleven! For me to write for this age group is easy because I can get there pretty quickly."

I loved this book !! Another good one, just when you think Things are safe, Lucas surprises us by going back into a potential dangerous situation.

This was a gift for a child that loved mysteries, loved reading but wasn't the best reader. It kept the child's interest and accomplished the practice of reading as well. The book wasn't too childish for this child as they are an older reader.

Happy to get this series for my grandson. He said he has been enjoying these books.

New author for me. Interesting story with the young crime fighters. Good storyline. Good read. Highly recommend.

Wonderful series with plenty of action and humor, peppered with tons of geographic references. Recommended for smart globally-minded kids.

YOUR KIDS ARE GOING TO LOVE THIS BOOK! It's a book kids read without realizing that they are reading! Adventure, plot shifts across the globe, kid-empowerment, and big issues in a breezy, 'kid brain voice' style. "Righty Tightly Lefty Loosey!" My son was completely engrossed, especially with the maps, working out where we live in relation to Argentina, Spain, Bangladesh and places in between. I especially liked that the book dealt with big global problems like trafficking, and idea theft in ways that engaged but didn't scare my son. The 'cool' kids in the book have and conquer fears, while knowing things like the tune to the Argentine national anthem. Priceless is a kid-captivating and a door-opening book. For parents, it reminded me a little of the Grand Budapest Hotel, it can be taken in on many levels, from some great laughs - "he had traveled so much his jet lag had almost lapped him and canceled itself out" - to enduring questions of good and evil.
