Synopsis

This is the best cat book you can ever find. Everything is so fluffy and airy-fairy in the kitty-catty world. Cats know their worth, acting grand and being as laid-back as they ever can be. They are licking their soft fur and laze up in the sun. But there is one catch in this harmony: two cat groups are not friends in between as they don't really see the point in doing that. Smart and fine tabby cat comes to a town. He is a cool and trendy big city cat. This cat is also very smart. Stripy decides to show other cats how much fun it is to be friends. The story is written in a light and fun way. It is filled with amazing kitty pictures which will keep your child entertained right to the end of story. Your child will learn the most important life lesson about how great it is to be friends with someone, and that despite outward differences, inside we are all very cool. Customer Reviews

I was happy to be asked to review a copy of this book voluntarily. I enjoyed reading it to my 5 year old grandson. The rhythm & flow of the words as they rhymed made it a nice reading & listening experience for us both. The illustrations are wonderful! What a nice teaching tool for children about differences on the outside & how we are basically the same on the inside. I liked how there were the 2 groups of cats, black & white who didn't play together... then enters our unique two toned cat who helps them resolve what they think are differences but end up being commonalities between the two groups. This topic was handled nicely & is a good story for teaching acceptance for our children. I remember the '60's & segregation. My grandson & I had a little chat about history & how things used to be. I would highly recommend this book for young readers.

This is a good book for kids, never judge a book by the cover and never judge about any color.

Ms. Mila Mirason has done a marvelous job in her debut children's picture book in communicating how two diverse groups of cats; one pure black and the other pure white would refuse to do anything together because of the color of their fur. Then along comes Strippy, a black/white striped cat into the white cat's neighborhood and wanted to play with them, but he couldn't because they said he wasn't white. He then convinces the white cats he is white but also has black stripes which makes him special. The white cats were tired of looking the same as each other, so Strippy uses a pot of black ink and paints black stripes on them, and they loved how each one of the looks different now. He then went to the black cats and did the same thing. Later, when each group of cats saw each other they saw no difference between them and started to interact with each other and enjoyed themselves. Even after it rained, and returned everyone back to just being black or white, their interaction continued unabated as they were having too much fun playing with each other; along with this came their realization of what they had missed staying separated from each other solely because of the different colored fur each of them had. When the two groups of cats started to have kittens of their own, their kitten all had a different combination of black/white fur making it impossible to tell the difference between them, since their difference now made them all look the same. The story becomes more vivid due to the marvelously appropriate illustrations which fit their words perfectly. With the superb intention of the storyline to teach the book's young readers, about the separation of groups based on a single characteristic being wrong if not stupid, I'm happy to give the author the 5 STARS she richly deserves for this endeavor. I had received a mobi.file of this book through the author through a giveaway she had on LibraryThing and the above has been my honest opinion.
