Hana: A Photographic History Of Hawaii's Paradise

Synopsis

As an aspiring teenage photographer, Bruce McAllister documented life in Hana, Hawaii's Paradise, in the 1950s, shooting Kodachrome photographs with his reliable Leica. Historical photographs from local and multiple sources were added to compile this book. There are rare photographs of Paul Fagan, who turned Hana from a failing sugar mill into an exotic tourist destination. There are also chapters on the infamous, but colorful Hana Highway, Hana's beaches, the original Hotel Hana-Maui, the famous Hasegawa General Store, Kaupo, Haleakala National Park, and Charles Lindbergh's last years in Kipahulu.

Bruce McAllister has authored eleven aviation history books after a forty-year career as a freelance magazine photographer. Before he began his photography career, he was a photo trainee at LOOK Magazine in New York City, copy boy at the San Francisco Chronicle, and staff photographer for the Harvard Crimson. He spent his teenage summers in Hana photographing street life when he wasn't bodysurfing.
