Edible Orchids Mounted onto Bark Orchids on bark create an eye-catching wall display. If the stems of the orchid plant start to stretch toward the light, try moving the display to the opposite wall.

Cocktail Herbs & Fruits Set sun-loving plants on the top shelf of the cart and mint on the bottom. Attach hanging planters of trailing strawberries and cucamelons to the handles. Pots of Tasty Roots Plant radishes and beets in pots with drainage holes set on trays or saucers. Place on a bench or tiled floor next to a large window or by a glass door. Chile & Herb Ball Suspend the display from a secure hook in the ceiling. Choose a sunny spot for it to hang, and ensure you can reach it easily to water and feed the plants.

Raise Sweet Peppers in Colorful Pots Set your pot of peppers close to a south-facing window or directly below a bright skylight in a warm room to mimic the plants' native growing conditions.

Mediterranean Mix A galvanized tub is a great choice for large fruiting vegetables, providing plenty of space for plants and handles to make it easier to move around so all your crops receive sufficient light. Cucamelons in Hanging Crates

The cucamelon's ivy-like foliage and striped baby fruits make a striking feature trailing from a wooden crate suspended beneath a skylight. Watering & Feeding Indoor Edibles All crops need the right amount of moisture to feed their roots to produce a good crop of leaves, fruits, or flowers. The trick to growing indoor crops successfully is to supply them with plenty of water while avoiding soggy soil.

Fruit & Flower Windowbox Create a mix of fruits and flowers in a windowbox for a summer-long display. Keep all the plants in the windowbox well watered, even during wet weather. View larger

Author, book editor, and journalist, Zia Allaway is a qualified horticulturist and has written a range of gardening books for the RHS and DK, including The Complete Gardener's Manual, The Encyclopedia of Plants and Flowers, How to Grow Practically Everything, and Growing Vegetables: 101 Essential Tips. She has also edited The Encyclopedia of Garden Design and the RHS Simple Steps series. Zia writes a monthly column on garden design for Homes & Gardens Magazine, and is a contributor to the Garden Design Journal. She runs a consultancy service from her home in Hertfordshire and offers practical workshops for beginners. She has a small wildlife garden which she opens to the public through the UK charity, The National Gardens Scheme.

My newly single son recently moved into a tiny 500 sq ft apartment with great windows, window sills and light but no balcony. He is a chef and wanted an indoor herb garden. This book inspired him to have planters with herbs, tomatoes, lettuce, onions and more. The book gave him ideas for maximizing space and what to plant. He's a total novice gardener and loves it.
