Synopsis

As we turn to the fourth Gospel we come to entirely different ground from that which is traversed in the other three. It is true, the period of time covered by it is the same as in Matthew, Mark, and Luke, some of the incidents treated of by the "Synoptics" come before us here, and He who has occupied the central position in the narratives of the first three Evangelists is the same One that is made pre-eminent by John; but otherwise, everything is entirely new. The viewpoint of this fourth Gospel is more elevated than that of the others; its contents bring into view spiritual relationships rather than human ties; and, higher glories are revealed as touching the peerless Person of the Savior. In each of the first three Gospels Christ is viewed in human relationships, but not so in John. The purpose of this fourth Gospel is to show that the One who was born in a manger and afterward died on the Cross had higher glories than those of King, that He who humbled Himself to take the Servant place was, previously, "equal with God," that the One who became the Son of Man was none other than, and ever remains, the Only Begotten of the Father.

Good resource - reliable.

A. W. Pink is truly a wonderful and gifted expounder of the Scriptures. The Gospel of John is one example of his ability to bring out, very vividly, many of the truths that are overlooked by the average reader. Anyone having a true interest in coming to the knowledge of truth of God's Word should give an ear to Pink.

I am studying each book of the Bible and this commentary had more than I imagined. The author delves deep into explaining, comparing, and showing all of the parallels between the different books of the Bible. It was so helpful! Our God is an awesome God! Thank you Arthur Pink!
